

Georgia Press Educational Foundation Billy Watson Internship Program

Host Newspaper Application

In the last 23 years, Georgia Press Educational Foundation has provided funding for more than 150 newspapers to hire student interns. Today, the program continues to offer eight-week internship grants to newspapers to hire students interested in any phase of newspaper production, including advertising, editorial, circulation/marketing, online publishing and pre-press production.

The internship program provides students with actual newspaper experience while reinforcing their scholastic training with a goal of convincing interns to pursue a career in the newspaper industry. Most interns credit the program with giving them a perspective of the newspaper business that they could not have gleaned from the classroom alone.

Internships are awarded to publications that are members of Georgia Press Association. Newspapers that are awarded internship grants are responsible for the hiring of student interns and may choose from their own candidates or from candidates applying for internships through Georgia Press Educational Foundation.

GPEF Internship Mentors

The goal of the GPEF Billy Watson Internship Program is to attract students to the newspaper industry and encourage them to make it their career choice. GPEF believes that to achieve this goal, it is important that the work of interns is valued and that they build relationships with experienced journalists/managers during their internships.

Therefore, GPEF hopes each newspaper working with an intern will seek to pair the intern with a mentor, such as an editor or senior reporter for an editorial intern, who can also be (but doesn't have to be) the intern's immediate supervisor.

Mentors should try to provide the intern with support getting acclimated to their job duties and the newsroom environment by explaining job expectations and routines. For example, editorial mentors can guide interns on location of AP Stylebooks, provide a list of important news source contacts (such as the sheriff's office, commissioners, school board members), suggest convenient lunch places and even take the intern to lunch on occasion when time and work schedules permit.

Ideally, mentors and supervisors will be able to provide critiques of the intern's work and suggest ways for improvement and may even allow the intern to shadow them initially.

The board of trustees of GPEF recognizes the importance of valuing the work of interns and providing them with guidance and feedback. The ability of the newspaper to provide this atmosphere will be one of the criteria that GPEF will use to award internship grants.
